

Biography

Eric Sauda is a registered architect who specializes in the use of digital and computational technologies and their transformative effect on architecture. He is director of the Digital Arts Center at the College of Arts and Architecture. His research has focused on the areas of urban visualization and interactive architecture. He works closely with the Urban Visualization Research Group, the Charlotte Visualization Center at the College of computing and Informatics, the ComputingInPlace Research Group and the Vice Chancellor for Information Technology.